

"BLITZKRIEG" - COMING IN OCTOBER!

Largest Avalon Hill Wargame Ever, Scheduled For Fall Publication

"Blitzkrieg", the game of lightening warfare, has finally gone into production. This new game, after years in the planning and design stage, is the embodiment of every aspect of the art of wargaming.

Huge Playing Board

Bigger than "Tactics II", more intricate than "Bulge", and more complex than "D-Day" and "Midway" put together, "Blitzkrieg" incorporates all of the most exciting features found in Avalon Hill battle games. The game is played on a huge 42" x 22" triple-fold mapboard - 50% larger than any previous Avalon Hill mapboard.

"Blitzkrieg" is a fictional battle game patterned after Germany's breakout of the second World War. Five "weak" countries become engulfed in a tremendous conflict waged by "Big Red" against "Great Blue." Most of the continent is surrounded by sea thus invasions can be attempted as in "D-Day." In addition, air power plays a big part in this game that includes over 300 troop counters.

Land and Air Battle Game

Troop Counters include Units of Infantry, Airborne, Armor, Marines, Rangers and Break-through Artillery. In addition, strategic, tactical, bomber and fighter Units are available. A brand new way of resolving combat, even newer than in "Bulge", necessitates many substitute counters which are also provided in the game.

Basically a two-player game, players must attack and defend over every type of terrain imaginable - from invading rocky-bound coasts to holding up in mountainous areas. Combatants must also cross the Great Koufax Desert (so named because it is sandy) to sieze enemy replacement centers. Judicious use of air power often turns the tide of the struggle - combat occurs fast and furiously keeping players on their strategical toes. "Blitzkrieg" has everything you have asked for...truly the ultimate in lightening warfare.

Not Available Until October '65

"Blitzkrieg", at this very moment, is coming off the production lines and on its way to the wholesalers. Most retail outlets will have it in stock soon after October 1st. But according to our fair trade marketing policy, direct mail orders to the general public will not be processed until the retail stores become stocked.

"General" Subscribers To Get Priority

A reserve of first line copies will be made available to subscribers on a direct mail basis. Therefore, we will accept - NOW - direct mail orders for "Blitzkrieg." Upon receipt, such direct mail orders will be held and processed at exactly the same time the games will go on sale in the stores. While you will probably obtain it quicker from your

Bulge - in its 2nd Printing

The Battle of the Bulge, newly released in March '65, has developed into the most well received and sought after game of any Avalon Hill title released in the last three years.

Some minor adjustments were made. There were no changes made in the Basic game; however, the Tournament game found a few Optional rules added for play balance and realism. The most significant change is the addition of a Fortress Counter at TT-10 at the start of the game.

Only the Battle Manual has been changed...all other game parts remain the same. The diagram at bottom of page 8 has been corrected. In addition, the Battle Manual incorporates a German Supply problem plus a provision for allowing retreats of more than one square through dense woods and rough terrain. Another option allows armored units to withdraw from "engages" if they so desire.

Subscribers wishing to update their game may do so simply by enclosing a mere quarter (.25¢) for the Battle Manual. You'll get it a lot sooner if you also enclose a 6" x 9" self-addressed, return envelope containing a 5¢ stamp. Just request "Bulge Battle Manual" on your order.

local store, a direct mail order from you will receive priority over the normal direct mail business.

Game to Retail for $6.98

Because of its hugeness and additional parts, "Blitzkrieg" will retail for $6.98. This includes parcel postage and handling. (No tax required.) Add 65¢ if you wish it rushed to you by special delivery.

To make sure your order gets shipping priority, please mark the envelope "subscriber order".

A Play-by-Mail Kit is also available at $1.98. Discount coupons, minimum of four, may be applied toward the order. Please send a check or money order to: The Avalon Hill Co., 210 W. 28th Street, Baltimore 11, Maryland.

Avalon Hill P-B-M League

Mr. Bruce Mathews, corresponding secretary, has written us the following for publication: "There seems to be a misconception on the 15 day limit. Many players write to me saying they haven't received a letter from their opponent for a couple months. They could make it much easier on me and on themselves if they would write as soon as possible when the violation occurs.

"Many members have written asking for explanation on the Honorary membership. It is given to a person who gives outstanding contributions to the wargamers advancement. It is a life long membership and the holder is entitled to all privileges as other members only without paying dues. Other Honorary members not listed in the newsletter are Sgt. Zocchi no. 4 and Daniel Hughes, no. 7.

"Mr. Bodenstedt has written to me and it has been decided that the Games Committee be re-named the Games and Rules Committee. This committee will function to interpret rules and make play balance changes subject to my veto.

D-Day '65 Re-visited

To those of you who have seen the D-DAY '65 tournament rules it is obvious that the German cannot win! To remedy this situation I strongly recommend the following revisions of the tournament rules:

Airpower: The present air rule is too strong to be either realistic or play-balanced. Instead, the Allies should be given 80 non-reusable factors of airpower. These factors are used like regular attack factors with the following reservations: 1) Their use is limited to 10 factors per turn and 5 factors per attack. 2) They must be used in conjunction with a ground attack and cannot be used either to cut off retreat or in exchanges.

Supply: The 17 square supply rule is ridiculous! Amend it as follows: For every 8 squares a unit advances from its supply point it needs one supply factor. For example, a unit within 8 squares of Rouen would require 1 supply factor; between 9 and 16 squares, 2 factors, etc. Furthermore no supply is possible through beach squares outside the invasion areas, but is possible through captured ports. Also units may not be brought ashore in excess of supply. Up to 3 German units may be supplied from each coastal city or fortress free from Allied zones of control.

Paratroops: This rule is amended to provide that all Allied paratroops can drop 3 times and the Br 52 Inf is considered airportable, i.e. it may be dropped once after the second move of the second invasion or week 16, whichever comes first. Also the German 6th Parachute Regiment (1-1-3) may be dropped twice but not before week 14. However, this unit's drops are not lost if the unit is eliminated. They can be used after the unit is replaced.

Missing Units: Add the following units which are missing from the initial order of battle:

ALLIED - Br 1st Arm Div, Br 15 Inf Div, Br 30 Inf Div, Br 50 Inf Div, all available in the D-Day force.

GERMAN - Panzer Group West (0-1-4), 19LW (1-2-2), 30 Mobile Brig (2-2-4), all available anywhere; 10SS Panzer Div (6-6-4), 2 Parachute Div (3-3-3) both on starred squares.

GERMAN REINFORCEMENTS - Turn 1 - 363 Inf (1-2-2); Turn 3 - 89 Inf (4-4-3); Turn 6 - 70 Inf (4-4-3), 6 Para (3-3-3), 64 Inf (1-2-2); Turn 7 - *49SS Pz Gren Brig, *51SS Pz Gren Brig; Turn 9 - 59 Inf (4-4-3); Turn 11 - 100 Mot Brig (2-2-4), *106 Pz Brig, 107 Pz Brig (2-2-4), 108 Pz Brig (2-2-4), 111 Pz Brig (2-2-4), 112 Pz Brig (2-2-4), 113 Pz Brig (2-2-4); Turn 13 - 105 Pz Brig (2-2-4); Turn 14 - 7 Para (5-5-3); 325 Security (1-2-2) (appears in Paris when Allied units come within 5 squares of Paris). All reinforcements come in on starred squares except where indicated.

*These units are already in the game.

The following units are incorrectly designated: No SS in 3SS, 15SS and 25 SS. 319 Static should be a (3-4-3). 49SS, 51SS are Pz Gren not Pz.

Replacements: This rule is amended so that Allied replacements start week 12 at 3 factors per turn while German replacement is delayed until week 18.

Special thanks to Victor Madeja and Raymond Utz for their help in preparing this column. Comments will be greatly appreciated.

AH COMMENT: While many of Mr. Plumb's alterations appear of minor consequence, such as a two-drop parachute rule for the German 6th, our research department is not adverse to such designer's liberties. Please be informed that the British 50th Division, which Mr. Plumb lists as "missing," is included in the present order of battle.

Battle Odds and Ends

by Marc Nicholson

This column will be devoted to cleaning up my correspondence. First of all, I apologize to the many people whose letters I have not had a chance to answer--the mailbag has been overflowing lately. Also, this accounts for the delay in several of my play-by-mail games.

There is an AH club forming around Raleigh, N.C. and is in need of members. AH players in that area should be able to get information at their local dealers---Students of "The Bulge" should write to Matthew Buynoski of Battle Creek, Mich. for a unique system of American reinforcements---An organization known as SPECTRE is attempting to "conquer the world". I have been requested to help recruit members for an anti-SPECTRE group (Texas and D. C. appear to be SPECTRE strongholds). All requests for information on play-by-mail clubs should be addressed directly to the clubs and not to me, the best I can do is to forward the letters---Likewise, questions about

AH rules should be sent to AH--The most popular game in the Southeast appears to be Waterloo, with D-Day a close second--I would like to hear from all LeMans fans and particularly those who have designed new cars and courses---As yet, I have received no letters from the states of Tennessee and Mississippi, get with it y'all!---Any college in the Southeast with an AH club should contact AH for publication, also please inform me---To the Richmond, Virginia writer who neglected to sign his name: your plan for D-Day is workable and I would like more details--- Anyone in D.C. wishing to engage the infamous and illusive Brian Heavily should contact Marshall Cohen as he is my agent in that area---Finally and belatedly, many thanks to former editor Victor Madeja for his ideas which helped to formulate my last column.

Maybe next issue I may get to tactics in The Bulge.

Report On Correspondence

Myron R. Brundage & Wife

Since becoming Midwest Editor, I have received a fair amount of mail. It is mostly concerned with games which A.H. fans have built. All of the games, of course, were of a military nature. Among the titles were: Ambush; Viet Nam, Korea, Tactics III, WW I, WW II, etc. The boards for some of these games ranged in size from the standard A.H. hex size of 22" x 24" to the wall and floor sizes of 9' x 6' and 22' x 20' one N.U. student, the owner of that monster 22' x 20' board claims to have in his game room at home some "42 hand made ones of no less size than 48' x 4'." Can you imagine the size of his game room?

A good many of these games concerned with recent wars had air power incorporated into them like that of A.H.'s Midway or Bulge. It would appear that interest has been growing in Air Power in Land & Naval Battle games ever since Midway came out.

A Plainwell, Michigan fellow has a game board on which he can play any battle from 2750 B.C. to today and a Bronx New Yorker is working on a game based on Napoleonic Naval Warfare using 3D counters.

One of my p.b.m. opponents of Norwalk, Conn. has a ready to go naval battle game of the WW I battle of Jutland.

The ad that I placed in the May Issue for postcards from A.H. fans in my area didn't draw what I expected, but a few fans sent cards. From them I found that most fans preferred Land Battle over Air & Naval Battle, and that most everyone owns A.K., Stalingrad, Tactics II, D-Day, Bulge or Midway. One interesting item that came out of the cards was: "How in the H--- did Louisiana end up in the midwest?" Well, all I can say is: "Only Avalon Hill knows!"

The letter that interested me most came from a former U.S. Army Officer and veteran of the Viet Nam war. His letter praised Avalon Hill games and made some very wise points on Tactics. It said, A.H. games "are a good training ground for expanding a soldier's mind, if he would be a good commander" and "They are also a good place to practice the Principles of War; for, generally speaking, he who makes best use of them prevails." He told me that thru his years of experience as a professional soldier he has learned that there were no "mysterious secrets beyond the Principles of War" and it is merely 'excellence in execution' that leads constantly to Victory." I think his points are well made and could be taken to heart by all A.H. players who would wish to be victors rather than losers.

In closing I would like to publicly proclaim my appreciation in Tom Bosseler's column which I feel is a great aid to furthering ones' skills at A.H. games. (I hope this doesn't give him a swollen head.) It's the first place I turn to when I receive my issue of the "General." That is, after reading my column.

I would like to hear more from you fans on how you feel about A.H. games, etc. Would you like to see A.H. publish more Air Power games? Do you feel that A.H. should clarify rules, such as, does a rule that appears in one A.H. game apply in another game in a similar situation. Your suggestions, questions, ideas, and wants can better help A.H. and I in serving you better.

Odds Computation

by Stan Wolcott

There exists in Avalon Hill games today, something which has bothered me for quite sometime. What I speak of is the manner in which combat odds are arrived at.

The Status Quo

The present method is as follows (quoting from the WATERLOO instruction sheet): "Round off all battle odds in favor of the defender. For example, if battle odds are 29 to 10, thus lying between 2 to 1 and 3 to 1, it is rounded off to 2 to 1. In other words all fractions are rounded off in favor of the defender." This to me seems grossly unfair to the attacker and overly generous to the defender. Sure, examples can be found in military history of out numbered forces defeating or getting the best of the enemy, but these were exceptions rather than the rule. We saw above that odds of 29 to 10 would be converted to 2 to 1, if we would follow AH's formula, i.e., "all fractions are rounded off in favor of the defender." Here the fraction would be 9/10, practically another whole multiple, yet it is ignored and the battle is fought as a 2 to 1. Thus, AH has, in effect, created a situation tantamount to a military miracle.

Insult to Injury

As this were not enough of an injustice to the attacker, lo and behold came an even stiffer measure with AFRIKA KORPS. The odds computation table which superceded the old slide-rule computer, let it be known that henceforth such conditions would exist making it possible for odds of 6 to 7 to be converted to 1 to 2 or odds of 4 to 9 to become 1 to 3. Hard to believe isn't it? Yet that's exactly what they did. Some of you will say, "Well what great effect can come from just that small change in procedure." The truth of the matter is, that it changes the whole atmosphere of the game. The attacker is more reluctant to attack; he'll make fewer spoiling attacks and less soak-offs. It was no longer fun to be the attacker!

The Corrective Measure

To correct this situation, which has gone beyond the point of endurance, I simply modified the existing rules in one important way. Whereas up to now all fractions had been rounded off in favor of the defender, now only fractions of 1/2 or better would be rounded off. For example, a 4 to 9 would be a 1 to 2 because 4 when divided into 9, leaves a fraction of only 1/4. Odds of 4 to 10 however, would be a 1 to 3 because here the fraction would be 1/2. Another change which I included was that not only would the defender get the benefit of the fraction, but also the attacker. Going back to that 29 to 10 which we spoke about previously, under the new rule it would become a 3 to 1 instead of a 2 to 1 since the fraction is 9/10. Odds of 14 to 5 would be a 3 to 1 also, since the fraction is greater than 1/2.

A Better Way

That then is my system of odds computation. I feel it is vastly superior to AH's method and that it greatly improves the play of the games. To reiterate, the system involves only these two steps: (1) Divide the smaller factor, whether it be attacker or defender, into the larger and obtain a quotient; (2) If the fraction is greater than 1/2, go to the next higher or lower odds as the case may be, the recipient being the one with the larger factor.

Questions?

If you have any questions or comments concerning this article, please write to me about them; I enjoy hearing from you and would like to learn what you, the reader, think.

Concerning last issue's article on WATERLOO defense, I have received many letters, the greater part being of the "I doubt it" variety. One such letter, from Richard Shagrin (Albuquerque, N. Mex.), has challenged me to a PBM game to show me the error of my ways. I've hardily accepted his challenge, for I'm as much in doubt about the worth of my idea as he is and I'd like to find out how it will go. I'll try to keep you posted about the progress of the game in future columns.

AH comment: the "odds computation" method employed by Avalon Hill for many years has been quite a bone of contention...and many players have felt the same way as Stan Wolcott. In defense of their system, Avalon Hill feels that the carry over point, whether it be exactly on the whole number as it is now or on the 1/2 way point as suggested above is somewhat immaterial. It behooves the players, themselves, to better plan their attacks so that they do not wind up with the 29-10, 6-7 odds, etc. Future combat results tables, like the new one in Battle of the Bulge, will reflect corrective measures in the tables, themselves, rather than in the method of computing the odds. Thus the making of battle results relatively more favorable to the attacker, accomplishes the same end results as does Mr. Wolcott's suggested corrective measure.

Problems and Solutions

by Tom Bosseler

In this issue's column many tactical and strategical problems which my readers have faced will be presented. First, you will read the situation, decide on what you would do, and then see the solution.

WATERLOO

Situation: By 1 PM on the first day the French have taken Quatre Bras. The losses to all three armies has been quite low. Because of an excellent holding attack the Prussians have been cut-off from the Anglo-Allies. It is very apparent that the Allies can not hold out for long.

Solution: The Prussians must attack the French immediately. Any withdrawal to Wavre would allow the French to completely smash the Allies. The attack must be directed toward Genappe. If the Prussians attack toward the rear of the French it will be easy for the French to delay them. If, however, the attack comes directly on the flank the French must engage them. Now all that is needed is for the French and the Prussians to exchange casualties...

In the original game the Prussians swung around the rear of the French at the slopes of QB. By careful delaying the French was able to cut through to Waterloo before the Prussians had even advanced to Gennappe.

D-DAY

Situation: The Allies are firmly ashore at LeHavre. They have captured Dieppe, LeHavre, Rouen, and Mantes. It is the beginning of the 4th week and the German reserves have just arrived. The south part of the Seine, the Somme, and the Oise are in German hands. Is it possible for the Allies to break out?

Solution: It seems here that the German made his biggest mistake by completely writing off the possibility of an attack at LeHavre. This probably allowed the Allies to capture Rouen and Mantes and thus divide the Germans into two parts. Now all the Allies have to do is attack before the German. Two unorthodox 2 to 1's across the Seine would not only insure the breaching of that river but also leave the Allies enough strength and mass to carry out attrition attacks across the Somme. For every unit the Allies lost another would get to the front immediately but the Germans, because of their hairy exterior lines will eventually have to retreat.

In the actual game the attacks across the Seine were the turning point of the campaign. Here, the Allies managed to drive almost unopposed to the Meuse thus forcing the retreat of Superior German forces in the North.

MIDWAY

Situation: The Japanese, in an effort to create powerful air attacks has grouped all his ships together. The American upon finding such a concentration wonders how it is possible to attack with any success.

Solution: It seems to me that the Japanese has left himself out on a limb. If the American attacks the Japanese cannot strike back the next turn because he doesn't dare ready any of his carriers. This will allow the American to refuel his planes free from any air attacks. The Japanese can still get power from a scattered fleet if he concentrates his attacks.

In the actual game the American was able to sink both the Soryu and the Kaga before the Japanese could even attack.

I would very much appreciate any comments any of you have out there. It's obvious that all the above situations are correctly diagnosed, so I would very much enjoy to look over any odd situations you might have.

Who Says "Bulge" is Unbalanced ??

by David Arneson

First off I would like to say something about that column in the July "General" that said "Bulge was undoubtedly one of the worst AH games." I disagree 100%. This game is one of your all time greats. It is perfectly balanced the way it is right now. In all the tournament games played in our club we have found it to be so well balanced that even one battle or maneuver could change the entire outcome of the game. In other words any action could and has decided the outcome of the game. Here are some of my opinions on what Private Marc Nicholson said.

The basic game is by far the hardest for the Germans to win because they cannot advance. Engages of course do hold them up more but because the basic game is for beginners...this is alright. The statement that the Germans do not need any forts is absolutely the end. How are they supposed to protect their southern flank south of Bastogne... set up no trespassing signs to stop Patton's Third Army, or perhaps they should tie down half a dozen divisions trying to stop them in the open while carrying on an offensive. Not to mention the fact that if any drive is made in corps strength it would further weaken the Germans because of the necessity to withdraw a division or two to drive it back.

I agree with the tactical air power to some extent and that it should be added to if the allied is not well acquainted with the game. But I do not believe that the allied player should be allowed to use more than six factors per turn and not used at all when a strategic air attack is launched (the allied air force would have to put their all into the attack). As far as the uncertain order of appearance goes it does everything but give the game to the allies. On the turn after the two SS panzer divisions comes in the Americans get in 14 regiments to reinforce their positions there by nearly doubling the size of the defenders. By getting their new armour in just previous to this the Germans have a chance to break into the open and force the U.S. to put the new troops into the line and not launch a big counterattack. This rule probably seals the German chance of victory against a well entrenched enemy that is able to raid your lines and reinforce his engaged units and generally slow down the Germans to a crawl if not stop them.

Nicholson's next suggestion is senseless: occupy Elsenborne ridge indeed... how do you think the Germans are going to get the Spa without crossing the ridge in two places. All this rule does is tie up one more German unit and wipe out anyone trying to defend the ridge against the German armour, not to mention the fact that the Germans could cross the mountains west of Stavolt and cut off the defenders.

His last point has some merit for a poor allied player but as it is it makes a German victory impossible. All the allied player has to do is use these units to hold up the Germans on the second turn while the combat units build their forts. When this line is broken they set up another and so on until the Germans casualties make advance impossible. The delaying units alone could hold up the Germans for three days and each time they're used it gives a combat unit behind it time to build a line of fortifications that takes time and troops. It is unreasonable to expect three panzer divisions to support troops for 12 hours. I instead suggest a variation of this to a more reasonable ruling. The blocking units can only be made by a division and not by regiments. In order for a division to establish the road block it should have two regt's left unengaged and at least one of them has passed through the square. The German should be able to gain an automatic victory over the defenders and all subsequent units that pass through the square have 1/2 of there remaining movement lost (basic movement). The requirements for this are as follows. On rough terrain road you need 18 factors also in towns and bridges. They need 9 factors in wood squares. The reason you need a division is that each division had a recon-battalion attached to them which was for the most part independent of the infantry units, otherwise if you use the regiments it would reduce their combat by 15% with casualties and all. I also feel that the German armored divisions and the two para-units should also be able to construct delaying units. David Arneson, 1496 Hartford Ave., Minneapolis, Minn.

A Plan for Amateur von Runstedts

by Mathew Buynoski

Anyone who has ever played the Bulge Germans knows that, if he dissipates his strength in three directions, toward Spa, along the Vielsalm-Hotton road, and from Clervaux to Bastogne and Houffalize, the American use of terrain (especially on the northern half of the board) can slow him down until it is too late to win, or stop him altogether. If the German commander splits his tank divisions, this is even more valid since the overwhelming mass supplied by these units is spread out and wasted.

To remedy this, I offer German commanders the following plan:

1) concentrate as many units as possible (especially panzers) in one specific zone of attack.

2) try to concentrate the main German effort along the sides of a triangle St. Vith-Clervaux-Bastogne & Houffalize and meet up in the Bastogne-Houffalize with all panzer divisions.

3) defend the rest of the front as lightly as is safely possible, thus freeing more infantry units for the "supreme effort."

By following these directions, the German gains the following:

1) he avoids the miserable terrain on the northern half of the board.

2) will outflank the entire northern half of the board from his position at Houffalize (this becomes even more pronounced as the Germans push a bit north. By reaching Manhay, they force the U.S. to evacuate the Vielsalm-Hotton supply route).

3) concentrate a massive force of big units at one point, a concentration which usually results in breakout and, incidentally, the fastest and strongest units in the German army being available to exploit a breakout.

The general plan goes something like this. The German starts by attacking St. Vith savagely while grinding over Clervaux and the mountains around it. After taking St. Vith, the Germans clear the hills dominating the St. Vith-Houffalize road (absolutely necessary as a supply route; there is no other. Unfortunately, the German C.O. will find that this plan has a decided lack of supply routes until he is well past Houffalize). Meanwhile the Southern force has, with its 2 parachute and 3 panzer divisions, hammered through the mountains between Clervaux and Bastogne. Now, in one huge drive, all the German forces in the St. Vith area come roaring down the road to Houffalize, and, linking up with Southern force on the left flank, crashing into Bastogne, penetrating to La Roche and the road junction just north of Houffalize. In one fell swoop, 7 panzer, 2 parachute, and several infantry divisions will blast a hole in the U.S. defensive wall. This is the most critical stage: if Bastogne doesn't fall, the lack of supply routes will kill the offensive, and if the U.S. forces in Vielsalm aren't forced to withdraw by turning their flank, i.e. the Manhay-Houffalize road, then the front becomes so long that too many troops are tied down protecting the flanks and the offensive dies from lack of troops. Once, however, the critical stage is passed, Bastogne taken, and the Hotton-Vielsalm route cleared, the rest is a grand sweep from the Ourthe River to Rochefort and Marche to the Meuse and victory! Usually, by this time the only hope the U.S. player has is to delay the Germans in the woods bottlenecks at Marche and Rochefort and attack on the flanks. To counter this, take along plenty of infantry to help hammer through the woods, and guard the flanks with only as much as is needed, but no more. (Leaving too much on the flanks suddenly causes a disappearance of the massed armor spearhead). The effort of stopping the main German drive will usually preclude anything but minor efforts in the flanks areas. If, however, the U.S. player does take the pressure off the spearhead and concentrate on the flanks, then push across the Meuse with about whatever seems necessary to insure that even in some units are elim. that the remainder will be over the required 50, and send what is needed to stall the U.S. drives. Don't forget that all a German Co. has to do is keep over the Meuse for 4 consecutive supplied turns. Don't waste units to insure that the supply route will be safe on the 5th turn; the game is over by then.

If German troops manage to capture Spa (by U.S. withdraw) then use more units on the flanks and send over the Meuse the 5 units needed for victory. However, don't try to take Spa forcibly by campaign. Doing so requires a lot of units committed in rough, woody terrain, and will, if too much effort is involved, lead to the failure on the main drive.

So, if you're a German frustrated by terrain, bottlenecks, and U.S. doggedness, try this non-sure-fire plan.

Don't Help the "Poor Americans"

by Bill Whitaker

I have found by reading Marc Nicholson's article in the July, 1965 issue of the General and by talking to some friends that if one begins by playing the Basic Game of "Bulge" he loses all sense of proportion and sinks to the depths of despair where he wallows in self-pity until some joker comes along with "play-balance" to bail him out. However, should one take the bull by the horns and start immediately with the Tournament version, his vision and insight remain unimpaired and he can continue to play the game until experience turns the tide for the U.S. player.

To Marc Nicholson I offer my congratulations for sticking his neck out, and my sympathy if S/Sgt. Zocchi gets hold of it, which he most certainly will. Below is an attempt to soften the blow.

I shall begin my plea for the American by recounting a "Bulge" game between two reasonably competent wargamers who shall remain nameless. Both had played with each other several times and each was confident of final victory. Neither had a reputation for telekinetic control of the dice.

Once this is set up one can readily see that the German player is slightly unorthodox in his ways. His luck with the die was average, but all of his major goals were accomplished. It remained for the American to hold tenaciously until help arrived. His attempt did not even have the distinction of failing miserably, but was merely mediocre. He did, however, succeed in building up a fortified line short of the Meuse which the German had to punch his way through. This forced him to strip away some of the units guarding his line of supply (which he did not need at that time because he still was on interior lines, but which he needed desperately later).

Eventually, the German drove across the Meuse in three columns. The main column was down the center and consisted of three panzer divisions and three volksgrenadier divisions. Another twisted south and, outflanking U.S. units, sealed off Sedan and struck north across the Meuse. It consisted of three volksgrenadier divisions and one parachute division. The third column was in the north and consisted solely of armor. It was this that the American sniped at for the rest of the game, using a single armored division and a single infantry division to tear into momentarily isolated regiments and then withdrawing across the river. It is this that is the American's great resource, what S/Sgt. Zocchi would call his "hidden power." In order to win he must make the most of what little he has.

By this time the German was stretched thin all along the "bulge" he had created. The American's 22: A.M. reinforcements crushed the few volksgrenadier regiments guarding the roads to Diekirch and Martelange and pushed northward, cutting the Nazi supply lines. By the time the German had moved enough panzer units back east to try to guard his other supply lines and take Bastogne, the U.S. 23: A.M. reinforcements had pushed in at squares BB and HH and had completed the job of cutting the German's supply lines.

Now the German was in trouble. He struck eastward with three panzer divisions, hoping to open one supply line and hold it open for the four turns necessary to give him victory. He succeeded, using his 23: A.M. reinforcements (which had come in on the road at VV-17 and moved toward Clervaux) and his 26: A.M. reinforcements plus the three panzer divisions, but the American slipped around and cut the supply lines farther west. With his reduced movement rate, the German was unable, in the face of U.S. air power, to react quickly enough to the moves of fast American troops and he surrendered his sword at the end of his 29: A.M. turn.

Thus, you can see that by tenacious resistance until late in the game when the German has crossed the Meuse, the U.S. player can, by counter-attacking at the sides of the board (instead of dissipating his forces trying to cut down the number of Germans across the Meuse, which is a futile gesture), cut the German supply lines in time to save the election for the Democrats, so to speak...

Subscribers Drive Wild Race in Contest #8

Every "driver" spun out in the Le Mans racing contest of last month. Not one contestant crossed the finish line. But we did not revoke any driver's licenses because the poor-driving resulted from a rather poor day with the "dice." As a matter of fact, 5 stocks out of the 10 provided all ended up with a sales-in-hundreds digit of "6" which was a "spin-out" number. Were the law of averages working correctly, there should have been 6 "safely cornered" results out of 10. However, only 4 such results came up thus it was impossible for any contestant to finish the race. Therefore, the contestants who drove the furthest in the race before eventually spinning out were declared the winners. Only Floyd Carrington, whose entry just got in under the deadline, got as far as the fifth corner before spinning out. The remaining winners, shown below, got through 3 consecutive corners.

Hints to All Junior Bluchers

by Richard A. Shagrin

Most of you haven't read the Waterloo rules closely enough. Almost everyone I play, I find is calmly resigned to counter-attacking Desnouettes and Dire and II corps horse artillery in order to keep the hill in front of Quatre Bras unoccupied by French units. A 1-1-6 Prussian cavalry unit at FF35 or even EE35 will make it impossible for those pesky cavalry units to get on BB31 and 32 from whence they must be expelled with a certain amount of unnecessary danger to the P-A-A units involved. I have yet to see the definitive Prussian initial set up--the one I use varies every time and is no better than fair--but the major principles to keep in mind include--Don't get too far from Quatre Bras--It could be very embarrassing if the French race you to that Road Junction--and win! Don't let French units control the road--if they do it's a lot harder to get back to Quatre Bras. I suggest that the Prussians start out at row DD or further south--if you have a continuous line the French can't possibly block the road with their zone of control until you have a chance to withdraw to form a line along 35 or 36 and stop up that funnel between Bohrs de Metz and the forest Southeast of Quatre Bras. Of course you don't really want to withdraw--you hope that the French player is going to let a corps or two be surrounded and eliminated. But if he is strong east of Quatre Bras then he will be more than a match for you there--so use your interior lines to defeat II corps in front of the hill! If the Frogs have Quatre Bras by 5pm June 16 you have done a poor job. One more point--hang on to your cavalry--it's better to lose 20 points of infantry and foot artillery than 15 points of cavalry--you have to have it for soaking off, building your groups of two six pointers to 15 points, and to delay if he sends force down the secondary road to Wavre. Speaking of soaking off--keep a one pointer on Z31, the forest square ready to be moved onto AA31 to soak off. I can't think of any other tricks I've found useful right now but I hope this will motivate someone into disclosing their pet ideas, too... Richard A. Shagrin, U. of Washington, Seattle.

Operation Robert - D-Day

Below is an opening set-up for the Germans in D-Day. Named "Operation Robert" after its creator, Robert

Stephenson, 119 Juniper Road, Belmont, Mass., it is quite contradictory to the plans of the majority of players who suggest that the Germans fall back to the Seigfried line. This plan is based on inflicting numerous casualties on the Allies before falling back. "I have yet to lose with this plan", states Mr. Stephenson who admits that it takes a lot of strenuous labor and knowledge of defensive skills to make it work successfully. Here, then, is the opening German defense:

Thoughts on Midway

by Carl F. Knabe II

In my opinion, the Avalon Hill Company has hit a new high in entertainment and realism! MIDWAY is without a doubt one of the most carefully thought-through game to date. I am constantly impressed by its perfection as I play it.

The Company has also hit another high with this game: for the first time one can spend almost as much time setting up an AH game as playing it. This discouraging fact has forced me to a very practical measure. I have purchased several plastic fishing tackle boxes with the insides divided up into many small compartments; thus allowing each type of counter to be kept in its own box compartment which cuts down drastically the time required to set up MIDWAY. While I was at it, I bought a box of toothpicks. By using these on the battle board to show which group of squadrons each ship is firing at it is possible to keep track of even very large and complicated battle situations simply. One may tell at a glance which ships he has already planned the fire of and which ships he has left to fire with at the remaining attacking squadrons.

Certain things about the game have become evident to me and I would value any comment on these thoughts. Although each tactical situation is unique in itself, general guide-lines appear to apply:

1. When searching always call out solid blocks of areas. Of course, if you find what you were looking for, start calling another section. Even if you don't find him in this block, at least you know where he isn't; and that can be very valuable knowledge itself. The American can always be certain of at least the general Japanese disposition by calling blocks at the beginning of the game.

2. Avoid being found during the day and launch as crushing a blow as possible at 1700 Hrs. Thus although the attack gives away your position you have two night turns to ready your planes and get lost again. In fact, this can be generalized to trying to be sure of launching your attack from an unknown position to avoid retaliation.

3. When setting up and playing the battle board, I have found these general priorities to be useful:

FIRST: a. Attempt to preserve your own carriers and sink your enemy's. Your carriers are the heart of your fleet. Besides being worth the most pointwise, they also have a distressing habit of carrying too many of your planes down with them if they are sunk. A sense of perspective should be maintained, however. If several of your carriers are traveling together and are attacked, don't be afraid to accept the automatic sinking of one to save another. Accepting poor odds on all your carriers too often means the sinking of all your carriers.

SECOND: b. Attempt to cause your enemy maximum casualties when he attacks - especially in his torpedo squadrons, his most flexible weapon. Even if a ship is going down for sure attempt to take as many of his planes as possible with it. A little analysis is useful here.

Below is a graph showing the total number of planes that could be lost in each of the odds columns - 1/3, 1/2, 1/1, etc.:

It can be seen after examining the graph that 1/3 & 2/1 are the most desirable odds to have your enemy attack at from the standpoint of his losing planes.

THIRD: c. Finally, attempt to preserve as many of your ships as possible. This may seem self-evident, but the temptation is to put this step ahead of destroying the enemy's planes. The main point is: don't be afraid to sacrifice some of your ships to save others. It is better to have a smaller number of combat ready ships than a greater number mostly handicapped and disabled.

The Japanese definitely have the advantage in this game although the game is not as inevitable as, say AFRIKA KORPS under the old rules; the Americans with a little luck have an excellent chance to win. The most successful winning tactic to date has been the formation the second day of a cruiser screen two columns wide and stretching from 1 to 7 up and down the board with one heavily protected Japanese advance force of two or so heavy carriers and battleships and a rear force of the remaining carriers behind the screen. This tactic takes some maneuvering by the Japanese to keep from being eaten up piecemeal, but done right it can force the American back into successively smaller area of the board.

Perfect Russian Placement

"I think I have found the perfect Russian initial placement", says Scott Geller, 7740 Summerdale Avenue, Philadelphia. Here is his starting placement:

2nd ARM. to 15-30. Place the II Corps Infantry divisions in 10-32, 16-30, 17-30, 21-30, and 23-30.

Place the 6th ARM in 36-42 by moving it to sea through Red Cap. and landing it in City 43-43, then moving it by land to that position. Spread out the 21st through 24th Infantry Divisions in 16-6, 13-15, 15-7, and 26-9. These units, too will be ready to go where most needed on the second move.

Finish up by placing the remaining special units and H.Q.s as follows: 1st A.G. H.Q. in 3-7; 1st Army H.Q. in 18-27; 1st AMPH. in 18-29; 2nd Army H.Q. in 27-29; 2nd Mountain Div. in 31-32; and 2nd AMPH. in 16-7.

Care in the initial placement of the units and in the use of road movement will allow all units to reach the positions indicated.

This plan accomplishes two very important objectives. (1) The main defense line of the river which runs along vertical 26 has been completely crossed, and can now be used as a last minute defense line for Red if things go wrong. (2) Three Blue cities are now in Red hands including the Blue Capital. If Red gets lucky, the troops can hold on in all three and Blue will only get two units at replacement time while Red will get its full quota of 7. Blue will not even be able to re-create an armored division unless the blue army can re-capture Blue Cap!

The odds are, however, that Blue will re-take Blue Cap. but Red can surely hold on to City 27-29 and with anything but the very worst luck, Red should be able to keep control of City 43-43. Even with bad luck, Red should at least be able to keep the city in disputed control, thus depriving Blue of a replacement for that city.

The rest of the game is simply a process of gradually wearing down the blue army with repeated attacks. Even if Red loses one more unit than Blue each turn, his vastly superior replacement rate will win for him.

I believe that the best part about this operation is that win, or lose, the game will be exciting and fast moving with little chance of both sides settling down on either side of the central riverline and waging a war of attrition. If you use this plan, I can promise you a fast moving, action-packed game if not a sure win.

I would appreciate any comments or criticisms on this operation. Terry Griner, Route One, Greenacres, Wash.

Probability for U-Boat

by Jared Johnson

U-Boat is the one Avalon Hill game in which luck plays a predominant part. However, the skill comes in being able to increase the odds in your favor. U-Boat, like most other Avalon Hill games, is a mathematical game. A successful player must know some of the fundamental laws of probability.

To the U-Boat player I offer one very important piece of advice: Never fire all of your torpedoes to the same square. In fact it is a good idea to not fire more than one torpedo to any one square. The reason for this is a very simple lesson in probability. From here on I will assume that when the U-Boat fires torpedoes that the destroyer is within range, and that he will move more than one square. (If the destroyer moves only one square and stops, there is nothing the U-Boat player can do about it. He must still increase his probability as much as possible in the case that the destroyer does move more than one square.) Suppose the U-Boat player is going to fire the maximum number of torpedoes-four. He plans to divide them up among the three squares that the destroyer can reach on his second move. The best way to do this is to fire two torpedoes to square A, one torpedo to square B, and one torpedo to square C. Notice that if the destroyer moves into square A, that there is a 50% chance that the second torpedo will be completely useless. (He may be sunk by the first torpedo.) This is the reason for not firing more than one torpedo to the same square. Each succeeding torpedo has a rapidly diminishing chance of scoring a hit. The second torpedo has a chance of  $1/2 \times 1/2 = 1/4$  or 25%. The third torpedo has a chance of  $1/2 \times 1/4 = 1/8$  or 12.5%.

Let us analyze the above situation. If the destroyer moves into square A he has a 75% chance of being sunk, and a fifty percent chance in each of squares B and C.  $(75\% + 50\% + 50\%) \div 3 =$  a 58.3% probability of getting sunk. I divided by the number of squares the destroyer could reach on his second move (three) to determine the average probability.

Now suppose the U-Boat fires all four torpedoes to square A. His chances of sinking the destroyer are  $(93.75\% + 0\% + 0\%) \div 3 = 31.25\%$ . This is barely half the chance.

There are two more combinations when firing four torpedoes. If the U-Boat fires two to square A, two to square B, and none to square C, his probability of sinking the destroyer is 50%. If he fires three to square A, one to square B, and none to square C, his probability is 45.8%. Remember, I am assuming that the destroyer moves more than one square.

The following is a chart containing all of the combinations for firing torpedoes to the three squares the destroy-

Operation Forcepts - Tactics II

by Terry Griner

This operation for the RED army is used in conjunction with the Replacement rule. Its main goal is to control as much Blue terrain as possible with the opening move. Cities, of course, are the main objectives. First, land the 2nd PARA at 41-43 and move it to 39-43. Start the 3rd ARM. Division in 28-22 and move it along the road to 40-41. Move the 4th ARM. through the port at 43-16 to sea and land it at 41-43. Drop the 1st PARA. in 22-38, thus capturing Blue Capital and then move it by land to 24-35. Move the first Mount Div. through City 13-16 to sea and land it in the Blue Capital and move it to 23-37 where it can maintain control of Blue Cap. Put the 5th ARM. to sea through the Red Cap., land it in the Blue Cap. and move it to 25-34. Do the same with the 25th INF. and move it to 25-33.

Move 1st Arm. to sea through port 12-16 and land it at 2-28. Then move it to 4-32. Move the 2nd INF. to sea and land at 2-26, then moving to 4-31. Land the 2nd PARA at 41-43 and move to 39-43.

Next, move IV H.Q., 17th INF., and 19th INF., out along the road to 42-22, 42-23, and 42-24 respectively. Leave the 16th INF. to hold down City 43-16 by moving it to that square and move the remaining two IV Corps divisions to Northeast along the road to 32-23 and 33-23. Move the 12th INF. to 31-34 and deploy the remaining four infantry divisions of the III Corps in 28-31, 27-31, 30-31, and 31-31. Move III Corps H.Q. to 25-31.

Move the 1st INF. to 3-28 and the I Corps H.Q. to 7-16. Put remaining I Corps divisions (except the 2nd which has already been moved) in squares 8-14, 8-15, and 11-17. From these positions, these troops can be sent to any controlled city by way of sea on the second turn.

Move II Corps H.Q. to 19-30 and the er can reach on his second move and their respective probabilities for sinking the destroyer, providing he moves into one of them.

|       |       |       |       |
|-------|-------|-------|-------|
| 2-1-1 | 58.3% | 2-1-0 | 41.7% |
| 3-1-0 | 45.8% | 3-0-0 | 29.2% |
| 4-0-0 | 31.3% | 2-0-0 | 25.0% |
| 2-2-0 | 50.0% | 1-1-0 | 33.3% |
| 1-1-1 | 50.0% | 1-0-0 | 16.7% |

I have said nothing so far about firing to one of the seven squares the destroyer can reach on his third move. Sometimes it is better to fire to one of these squares rather than to fire a second torpedo to one of the three squares the destroyer can reach on his second move; especially when the destroyer is trying to catch up to the sub in order to keep it from entering the convoy zone. See diagram. There are several combinations of moves the destroyer can make when leaving from "X", nine in all. They are A-1, 2, 3; B-3, 4, 5; and C-5, 6, 7.

Notice that the destroyer is twice as likely to move into squares 3 and 5, rather than the other five. These are the squares I usually fire to until my opponent gets wise. Even if he tries to make his escape maneuvers as random as possible he will inadvertently move into these two squares more often.

There are, of course, always exceptions to the rules. In the case of a "down the throat" attack, the U-Boat may be forced to fire many torpedoes to the same square in order to cause the destroyer to turn violently or in order to be sure of sinking him before he can launch his depth charges.

New D-Day '65 Invasion Diagram in Error

D-Day players who have the brand new Battle Manual are directed to correct an error appearing in the text below the diagram on Page 7. We suggest that you cut out the following para-

The Allied player must be bold; the conservative approach of landing all invasion Units on the undefended Coastal Squares will prove fatal because the German player will have an easy time sealing off the St. Lo-Bayeux bottleneck. Thus, the Allied player hopes to eliminate this possibility by dropping parachute Units behind enemy lines. The three Parachute Units are dropped on Square U-33 which is not in any enemy zone of control -- the adjacent German Unit at V-34 is on the opposite side of the river thus its zone does not extend across to U-33. The Allied player has landed two 4-4-4 Units on Sea Square R-31 and, along with the 17th Parachute, attacks German Lehr at 11-10 (1-1) surrounded. Chance of victory is only 33% although there is a 50% chance of eliminating the German Lehr Unit. Next, the Allied Units on Sea Square R-33 and the Parachute Units on T-33 attack the German 2nd at 14-14 (1-1). The remaining two Units allotted by the Troop Invasion Table are landed on Sea Squares P-32 and P-33 and moved directly onto Coastal Squares to establish the beachhead. Victory in one or both of the above attacks will put the Allied player in quite an advantageous spot: (1) he will have secured a firm beachhead relatively close to Germany and (2) he will have eliminated the really strong German Units. However, the risk is so great, especially to the tactically important Parachute Units (the two Parachute Units, however, have a retreat route to T-32 and U-33 which are on opposite sides of the river to adjacent enemy Units) that we recommend the assault be made instead at Brittany when faced with the above German defensive setup.

Question Box

Q: If a Supply Unit is in Tobruch may the enemy land troops in Tobruch and capture the Supply?

A: No, because the enemy, not having control of Tobruch in the first place, could not land in Tobruch.
